O₄Sr₂W Strontium tungstate, 3722*i*.
O₅Ta₂ See Tantalum oxide.
O₅V₂ See Vanadium oxide.
O₅W₂ See Tungsten oxide.
O₆P₄ Phosphorus oxide, 6015*h*.
O₆P₄S₄ Phosphorus oxysulfide, 6015*h*
O₆PbS₂ See Lead dithionate.
O₆PbSb₂ Lead antimonate, 2392*g*.
O₆PbV₂ Lead vanadate(V), 8247*f*.
O₆Pb₂S Lead sulfate, 4968*c*.
O₆SU Uranyl sulfate, 497*d*, 1636*h*, 3745*i*, 4138*e*, 5671*g*.
O₆S₂Sr See Strontium dithionate.
O₆Sb₂Sn Tin antimonate, 2392*g*.
O₆Sb₂Sr Strontium antimonate, 2392*g*.
O₆Sb₂Zn Zinc antimonate, 2392*g*
O₆SrV₂ Strontium vanadate(V), 8247*f*.
O₆Sr₂W Strontium tungstate, 3722*i*.
O₆V₂Zn Zinc vanadate(V), 8247*f*.
O₇P₂Zn₂ Zinc pyrophosphate, 3723*a*, 8971*h*.
O₇P₂Zr₂ Zirconium pyrophosphate, 3723*a*.
O₇Pb₂S + H₂O Lead sulfate, 4968*d*.
O₇SZn₄ Zinc sulfate, 2492*i*.
O₇TiV₂ Titanium vanadate(V), 7803*b*.
O₈P₂Pb₃ See Lead phosphate.
O₈P₂Sr₃ See Strontium phosphate.
O₈P₂Zn₃ Zinc phosphate, 2399*h*, 3723*a*, 4528*f*.
O₈Pb₂S Lead sulfate, 4968*c*.
O₈RbS₂V + 12H₂O Rubidium vanadium alum, 8785*i*.
O₈S₂Sn Tin sulfate, 9150*e*.
O₈S₂TlV + 12H₂O Thallium vanadium alum, 8785*i*.
O₈S₂Zr See Zirconium sulfate.
O₈U₂ See Uranium oxide.
O₁₀P₄ Phosphorus oxide, 6015*h*.
O₁₁P₂U₃ Uranyl pyrophosphate, 8952*i*.
O₁₁P₂Zr₃ Zirconyl phosphate, 3313*e*.
O₁₁W₄ Tungsten oxide, 5707*i*.
O₁₁Zn₂V₄ Zinc vanadate(IV), 4171*c*.
O₁₂S₂Ti₂ See Titanium sulfate.
O₁₆PbU₄ See Fourmarierite.
O₁₆P₄Sn₂ Tin phosphate, 7785*c*.
O₁₆P₄Th₂ Thorium phosphate, 7785*c*.
O₁₈S₂U₂ + 9H₂O Uranyl sulfate, 3293*d*.
O₈₀P₂Sr₃W₂₄ + 48H₂O Strontium phosphotungstate, 2537*g*.
O₈₀P₂W₂₄Zn₃ + 48H₂O Zinc phosphotungstate, 7366*c*.
OsS₄ Osmium sulfide, 7363*a*.

P₂S₃ See Phosphorous sulfide.
P₂S₅ See Phosphorus sulfide.
P₂Zn₃ Zinc phosphide, 3140*d*, 3967*fg*, 6311*f*.
P₄S₃ See Phosphorus sulfide.
P₄S₇ See Phosphorus sulfide.
PbS See Galena; Lead sulfide.
PbS₄Sb₂ (See also Zinckenite.) Lead thioantimonite, 8936*h*.
PbSe See Lead selenide.
PbTe See Altaite; Lead telluride.
Pb₁₃S₁₈Sb₈ (See also Fülöppite.) Lead thioantimonite, 8936*h*.
Pb₁₃S₇Sb₂ See Meneghinite.
Pb₁₉S₁₁Sb₄ See Boulangerite; Falkmanite, Venerite.
Pb₁₉S₁₁Sb₈ (See also Plagionite.) Lead thioantimonite, 8936*h*.
Pb₆S₈Sb₂ Lead thioantimonite, 8936*h*.
Pb₇S₇Sb₁₂ Lead thioantimonite, 8936*h*
Pb₉S₁₁Sb₈ (See also Semseyite.) Lead thioantimonite, 8936*h*.
PdS Palladium sulfide, 7363*a*.
PtS₂ Platinum sulfide, 7363*a*.
PuSi₂ Plutonium silicide, 6484*h*.
Pu₂S₃ Plutonium sulfide, 3709*i*.

RbSi₂ Rubidium silicide, 5321*e*.
Re₂S₇ Rhenium sulfide, 2507*d*.
Rh₂S₃ Rhodium sulfide, 7363*a*
Ru₂S₃ Ruthenium sulfide, 7363*a*.

SSi Silicon sulfide, 2510*h*, 4612*b*, P 4624*i*, P 7891*f*, P 7893*f*.
SSn See Tin sulfide.
SSr See Strontium sulfide.
STl₂ See Thallium sulfide.
SZn See Sphalerite; Wurtzite; Zinc sulfide
S₂Si Silicon sulfide, 2881*e*, 4630*e*.
S₂Ti Titanium sulfide, P 1959*g*.
S₂W Tungsten sulfide, P 1959*g*, P 2220*i*, 5273*d*, 5321*i*.
S₂Zr Zirconium sulfide, 483*b*
S₃Sb₂ See Antimony sulfide; Stibnite.
S₃W Tungsten sulfide, P 3188*f*, 5273*e*, 5321*i*
S₄Sb₂Sn Tin thioantimonite, 6902*b*.
S₄SnTl₄ Thallium thiostannate, 63*h*
S₅Sb₂ Antimony sulfide, 3161*i*.
SbSn, 4917*a*.
SbZn, 3260*g*.
Sb₂Se₃ Antimony selenide, 483*b*, 8896*b*.
Sb₂Tl₇, 4917*a*.
SeSi Silicon selenide, 2510*h*.
SeSn Tin selenide, 483*a*, 2510*h*, 8896*a*
SeSr Strontium selenide, 2515*f*, 3723*a*, 6508*i*, 8277*f*.
SeTl₂ Thallium selenide, 483*a*.
SeZn Zinc selenide, 5670*h*.
Se₂U Uranium selenide, 483*b*.
Se₂V Vanadium selenide, 8896*b*.
Se₂W Tungsten selenide, 5322*a*.
Se₂Zr Zirconium selenide, 483*b*, 8896*b*
Se₃W Tungsten selenide, 5322*a*.
SiTe Silicon telluride, 2510*h*.
SiU Uranium silicide, 6484*i*.
SiU₂ Uranium silicide, 3709*i*, 6485*a*.
Si₂U Uranium silicide, 6484*h*.
Si₃U₂ Uranium silicide, 3709*i*, 6485*a*.
SnTe Tin telluride, 2510*h*.
Sn₃U, 7770*e*.

II. SUBJECT INDEX

KEY

In using this index the following should be borne in mind:

1. Subjects, not words, have been indexed.

2. Abstracts, not merely their titles, have been considered in indexing.

3. The italic letter which accompanies each reference number designates the fraction of the column in ninths in which the subject being indexed is first considered.

4. "P" before a column number indicates that the abstract is of a patent.

5. The alphabeting of index headings has been done on the basis first of that part which comes before the comma in such headings as Copper, metallurgy of and Phenol, p-nitro-. E.g., these headings come before the headings Copper compounds and Phenol condensation products, respectively.

6. Organic compounds are indexed on the basis of "parent compounds" or, more accurately, "index compounds" (see Introduction), the names of substituent radicals following in alphabetical order. The system of naming organic compounds which has been used is outlined in the Introduction below (fully described in the Introduction to the 1945 Subject Index). Esters and salts of organic acids are, in general, indexed under the names of the acids; notes in the index under the appropriate headings explain the few exceptions.

7. An asterisk (*) following the name of an organic compound entered in the index signifies that the name, or numbering, or both are the author's own and may not conform to the system of nomenclature used in this index. This sign is used where it has seemed inadvisable, owing to incomplete information, to attempt to make the name conform to the system, or where the author's name, differing widely from the one given to the compound by the indexer, is given as an extra entry. Such authors' names are occasionally slightly modified. Authors' names for inorganic compounds have also occasionally been marked with an asterisk.

8. A dagger (†), which follows the names of some compounds, signifies that the entry is an extra one, the name being only slightly less favored than the one chosen for the other entry. The preferred name can be determined by reference to the Formula Index.

SPECIAL NOTE

An index should be able to stand on its own feet. It should be readily and effectively usable without the need of an elaborate introduction. The index which follows the Introduction given below is not dependent on the latter. Numerous cross references are given throughout the index, and guiding notes appear at suitable points. Nevertheless for the best results in the use of any index the user must meet the index maker part way in an understanding of the indexing problem and, in particular, of nomenclature. A large proportion of the headings in the index to a chemical abstract journal must be the names of chemical compounds and accordingly systematic chemical nomenclature plays an important role in the building of such an index and in its use. In 1945 in the Introduction to the Subject Index to Volume 39 of Chemical Abstracts a full discussion (109 pages) of the naming of chemical compounds for indexing was published. This includes a classified bibliography and six appendixes devoted to lists of (1) chemical prefixes, (2) inorganic groups and radicals, (3) anions, (4) organic groups and radicals, and (5) organic suffixes, and to (6) the 1945 index of ring systems. This long Introduction cannot well be reproduced each year, but reprints at fifty cents each are available to the index user or student of chemical nomenclature who wishes more information than furnished in the more or less general outline given below. A revision and extension of the long 1945 discussion of the naming and indexing of compounds will be published in due time. Some modifications and additions are briefly discussed below.

INTRODUCTION

General policy. The indexing of subjects, as opposed to word indexing, has been emphasized. This avoids omissions, scattering, and unnecessary entries; with the abundant cross references used it means that one should be able to find all of the references on any subject with certainty and with a minimum of effort. The words used as subject headings or modifying phrases are not necessarily to be found in the abstracts, but an expression of the idea suggested will be found within or beginning in the ninth of the column designated by the italic letter following the column number. Chemical compounds have been named and entered systematically; the system used is described below. All new compounds and all elements, compounds, and other substances for which new data are given have been indexed, with the single exception of new compounds for which no names or structures have been given. Such compounds are entered only in the Formula Index. The Subject Index is in no other respect altered because of the Formula Index.

In general, the sound indexing principle has been followed of using for index headings words or names commonly in use (with cross references under less common synonymous words or names) so that index users will be more likely to turn to the right places at once. Exceptions are made to meet the requirements of systematic nomenclature, so essential for consistency. In accordance with this principle trade names have frequently been used as headings. If not so used, such names have usually been entered as cross references. Another example of the application of this principle is the use of mineral names instead of strictly chemical names for naturally occurring minerals and for synthetic compounds having the same crystal structure as natural minerals and customarily referred to by mineral names. Dana's "Textbook of Mineralogy," 4th edition, and "Dana's System of Mineralogy," 7th edition, Volume I ("Elements, Sulfides, Sulfosalts, Oxides") are used as standard sources for information on mineral names. Volumes II and III of the latter are still in preparation.

Chemical Abstracts has been thoroughly indexed—from the chemical viewpoint, of course. In deciding on subject entries to be made for an abstract, many factors need to be taken into consideration. Among these are the author's purpose, his point of view, the new data reported, new or modified methods and apparatus used in obtaining these data, significant relations brought out (as between color and chemical constitution in a chemical study of dyes), theories formulated, new substances prepared, suggested or likely uses for new substances (as in indexing patents), possibilities for the utilization of material (as certain so-called waste material), desirable groupings based on properties, processes, or operations, and effects such as industrial poisoning. Chemical compounds have been indexed except when insignificant information only is provided, as with common reagents, ordinary solvents, and the like.

Modifying phrases. In writing such phrases for the entries under any index heading the words have been arranged, if too much awkwardness does not result, so that the idea considered to be the most important is expressed at the beginning whenever feasible, and this procedure, as well as the selection of the words for this purpose, has been governed by numerous formulated general principles and specific rules. E.g., "detection of" has been used consistently whenever correct, regardless of what words may have been used in the text, at the beginning of the modifications in indexing subjects treated from a qualitative analytical point of view, instead of permitting a scattering under such additional phrases as "test for" and "reaction for." The entries under some headings lend themselves in part to a definite system of classification, and modifications are written accordingly. For example, under "Sugar manufacture" the modifications are so worded as to provide grouping of entries related to "boiling," "clarification," "crystn.," "extn.," "refining," etc. In alphabeting modifying phrases, prepositions and conjunctions at the beginning have been ignored.

Cross references. Cross references are of importance both to the index maker and to the index user. They help the indexer to build consistently and they are likely to be fruitful in searches. The "see also" cross references are intended, of course, principally to lead the index user to related subjects or headings, but occasionally, when information is indefinite, it has been necessary to use separate index headings for what may be like substances, plants, animal organisms, or the like, with "see also" cross references both ways. In these situations the "see also" cross references have special significance.

Compounds designated by numbers or by numbers and letters are indexed under their chemical names, when known. Cross references appear under the common names or designations. If the common designation includes letters and numbers, it is alphabeted according to the letters only, the numbers being ignored; e.g., "G 410. See Phenol, pentachloro-," is alphabeted at G (only). If the designation is only by numbers, the numbers are completely spelled out and alphabeted; as, "Six hundred and sixty-six (666). See Cyclohexane, 1,2,3,4,5,6-hexachloro-." If the number is commonly spoken in some other manner, a cross reference is also introduced at that name; as, "666 ("Six six six"). See Cyclohexane, 1,2,3,4,5,6-hexachloro-."

When an established heading normally accompanied by one or more "see also" cross references has no entries for a given year, the cross references have occasionally been published nevertheless, when thought helpful, after having been given the form "No entry this year. See—." The "see also" form is considered incorrect and a direct "see" form might be misleading (might be misconstrued to mean that the heading, which is to be used for entries later, as needed, had been discontinued).

Inorganic compounds. The simpler inorganic compounds have been entered under the usual names, as Sodium chloride and Ammonia. As the first example indicates, inorganic salts have been entered with the more electropositive part of the name first and the more electronegative part second.

The names adopted for indexing inorganic compounds are based, in general, on the best American usage and on the "Rules for Naming Inorganic Compounds" (Report of the Committee of the International Union of Chemistry for the Reform of Inorganic Chemical Nomenclature, 1940).[1] Another criterion in selecting names for indexing is the representation of structure so far as it is known and so far as this can be done in line with general indexing policy. Many of the older names for inorganic compounds are not now considered correct, in view of structural information obtained by modern x-ray and electron-diffraction methods; if, however, these names are firmly established, it has seemed unwise to attempt to change them for indexing. Where usage varies or is ambiguous or where new compounds are involved, the name selected for indexing is the one that best indicates the structure.

Final but very important criteria in the selection of index headings are the general indexing policies of indexing subjects, not words, of putting first as significant a word as possible, and of grouping related subjects or compounds. To this end specific compounds have usually been indexed under the simplest general names, i.e., those based on the constituents of compounds and preferably on the structure, but not always indicating the oxidation state of simple groups or cations and not indicating stoichiometric composition or polymerization. Formulas (bold-face if more than one compound is represented) have been used for the individual compounds under these group headings. Thus the various oxides of nitrogen have been grouped under the heading Nitrogen oxides, with bold-face formulas to set off the individual oxides, instead of being scattered under Nitrous oxide (or Dinitrogen oxide), Nitric oxide (or Nitrogen oxide), etc. Ferrous and ferric compounds have been grouped under headings such as Iron sulfates, and compounds of gold, copper, tin, etc., are similarly grouped under headings beginning with the names of the elements themselves, instead of "aurous," "auric" "cuprous," "cupric," "stannous," "stannic," etc.

Larger groupings by classes (for more general studies only) have also been made; e.g., Alkali metals, Alkaline earth chlorides, Helium group gases, Platinum metal alloys, Rare earth nitrates, Sulfates, Sodium halides, Alkali metal chalcogenides (oxides, sulfides, selenides, and tellurides). Headings like Iron salts, Iron compounds (including complex coördination compounds), and Iron preparations (including pharmaceuticals and mixtures) have been used. The heading Ammines comprises compounds containing coördinated ammonia. The most general of all the headings for groups of compounds is Chemical compounds. Cross references have been used freely and formulas introduced wherever they might prove helpful. The Formula Index, which follows the Subject Index, should be particularly helpful in locating complex compounds.

For binary compounds the order of decreasing electropositivity for nonmetallic elements given in the report of the German Commission for Nomenclature[8] has been followed: Sb, As, B, Si, C, P, Te, Se, S, I, Br, Cl, N, O, F, except that the headings Nitrogen chloride, Nitrogen iodide, etc., have been used.

Binary compounds of hydrogen have been indexed for the most part under the names most commonly used, e.g., Arsine, Hydrochloric acid, and Hydrogen sulfide. Cf. §19. (The sign § refers to sections in the Introduction to the 1945 Subject Index, "The Naming and Indexing of Chemical Compounds by Chemical Abstracts.") Silane, Disilane, etc., have replaced Silicane, Disilicane, etc., starting with Vol. 40. (See paragraph below entitled Silicon compounds.) For the indexing of other binary compounds see §§20–7.

Compounds that seem most suitably named as double salts have been entered twice when there are two cations (e.g., at Ammonium magnesium phosphate and Magnesium ammonium phosphate) and have been entered singly when anions instead of cations are doubled, the anions being given in alphabetical order (e.g., Tin bromide chloride). Cf. §§28–9 and §§30–5 for the indexing of other ternary and quaternary compounds.

Mixed oxides are named as salts of hypothetical acids when such names have been established by usage, even though structure studies indicate that the compounds contain no discrete oxygenated anions (e.g., Calcium titanate rather than Calcium titanium oxide).

Oxygen (and thio) acids and their salts have been entered for the most part under the simplest, most inclusive names or those conforming best with usage. E.g., with a few exceptions, as the phosphoric acids and phosphates, groupings have been made under such headings as Silicic acids or Sodium periodates (guiding cross references have been entered), with the avoidance of headings with prefixes such as meso-, meta-, ortho-, para-, pyro-, di-, tri- and poly-; the prefixes hypo-, per-, and peroxy-, however, are retained (cf. §§36–9). For heteropoly acids, a few well-established names such as phosphomolybdic, phosphotungstic, silicomolybdic, and silicotungstic acids have been used consistently in the C.A. indexes, but in some other cases uncertainties with regard to structure have led to more than one name.

Acid salts and basic salts with a few exceptions, such as uranyl salts, have been grouped under the simple names for the neutral or normal salts, e.g., Calcium phosphates, Copper chlorides, and Bismuth chlorides, with the formulas or "acid" or "basic" given in the modifications. This is a change from the former practice of entering some basic salts under such names as Bismuth oxyhalides and Magnesium oxychloride.

Coördination compounds (often complex) have been entered under their own names when definite names could be selected that are suitable for index entries and conform with usage or with the rules of the Commission on the Reform of the Nomenclature of Inorganic Chemistry of the International Union of Chemistry (loc. cit.). In general, names have been favored in which all coördinating groups are named before the central coördinating element; exceptions have still been made for the well-established names ferri- and ferrocyanide and nitroprussides (and the corresponding acid names); with Vol. 41 the old names cobalti- and cobaltocyanide and cobalti- and cobaltonitrite were changed to cyanocobaltate(III), cyanocobaltate(II), nitrocobaltate(III), and nitrocobaltate(II), respectively. Other examples of preferred names are: chloroplatinate(IV), fluosilicate, cyanomanganate(I), and nitropalladate(II) instead of platinichloride, silicofluoride, manganocyanide, and palladonitrite, respectively. (Stock's system of using an invariable "ic" or "-ate" ending and a Roman numeral to denote the oxidation state of the central coordinating element has been used for anions for which systems based on the use of -ate and -ite, -ic and -ous, hypo- and per- are inadequate and ambiguous.) Cf. §43.

[8] Meyer; Helv. Chim. Acta 20, 159–75(1937).

Compounds that cannot be given names suitable for index entries have been indexed, in each case, under a heading based on the significant element and also, in the case of coördination compounds, often under headings for the coordinated groups if they are significant, unusual, or specially stressed. Thus, in addition to the significant-element entry an entry has been made at Ammines (for compounds containing coördinated ammonia) or at the heading for a specific organic base that plays a similar role to $NH_3$ (before Vol. 41 both classes of compounds were entered at Ammino compounds—changed now to Ammines—and the specific organic bases were not always indexed). E.g., dibromodiammineplatinum, $[Pt(NH_3)_2Br_2]$, would be indexed under Platinum compounds and Ammines, and tris-(ethylenediamine)cobalt(III) chloride, $[Co\,en_3]Cl_3$, under Cobalt compounds and Ethylenediamine.

Use of the special headings Acetato compounds and Oxalato compounds for specific compounds has been discontinued after Vol. 40. Occasionally special entries have been made under headings like Thiosulfates where the interest in the negative coördinated groups seemed to warrant it; positive coördinated groups and neutral groups other than bases have also been considered to merit entries at times. Cf. §44.

Intermetallic compounds specifically mentioned have been indexed under headings like Beryllium compounds and Copper compounds. Metal systems, as in phase-rule studies, have been entered under "system" under the headings for all metals concerned. Headings like Beryllium alloys (with a "see also" cross reference to "system" under Beryllium) take care of studies in which the emphasis is on alloys as such. Formula Index entries have been made wherever possible.

Except for general studies of alloys, entries have been made under such headings as Copper alloys for each constituent of a given alloy down to small percentage or slight significance. Alloy trade names (very numerous) have been entered as headings, as Duralumin, with suitable cross references to direct the index user to these names "Engineering Alloys," by Norman E. Woldman and Roger J. Metzler (American Society for Metals, 1945), has been used for reference.

Deuterium compounds have been named for indexing by the modified Boughton system favored by the Nomenclature, Spelling, and Pronunciation Committee of the American Chemical Society.[3] According to this system the substitution of deuterium for hydrogen in a compound is designated by the use of d following the common name, or parts thereof, for the hydrogen compound as shown by the examples given below. To indicate the position of deuterium in a compound, the d is attached to the part of the name designating the hydrogen which is replaced. If more than one type of hydrogen atom is replaced (as in acetic acid), the positions of the entering deuterium are indicated exactly.

If an inorganic salt contains deuterium, the index entry has been made under the usual name for the salt and the deuterium has been indicated by formula in the index modification; e.g., $KD_2PO_4$ has been indexed under Potassium phosphates. If the number of the deuterium atoms is not known, the fact that deuterium is present has been indicated by "heavy" in the index modification

This method serves to keep the deuterium compounds close to the corresponding hydrogen compounds in the index. It also avoids the longer and sometimes confusing names arrived at by the use of "deuterio," in the manner commonly employed in organic chemistry to designate substituents. The modified Boughton names depart least from established nomenclature, are suitable for both inorganic and organic compounds, contribute to ease of thinking, are convenient for other use as well as indexing, and fit the conception that compounds containing deuterium are, after all, compounds of a form of hydrogen. It has been found that the "deuterio" system results in many strange names which have to be deciphered only to find the compounds old friends in disguise. With D used as the symbol for deuterium, cross references from the Formula Index to the Subject Index have been used or entries in both indexes have been made.

Tritium compounds ($H^3$ = T) have been named and indexed in a similar manner. E.g., $CH_2TI$ is entered as Methane-t, iodo-.

Silicon compounds. There is a recently adopted official nomenclature for silicon compound. It is described in Chem. Eng. News 24, 1233-6(1946). (Reprints can be obtained from Chemical Abstracts without charge.) This nomenclature has been followed in the 1949 index, with suitable cross references in the index to help in the transition from the older nomenclature. See the paragraph below on Organic Groups and Radicals for new radical names introduced for silicon compounds.

Organic compounds. Except for changes noted in the Introduction to the 1945 Subject Index and those listed in the note below, the system used for naming and indexing organic compounds is essentially the same as that in use starting with the 1916 volume. An explanation of it by Austin M. Patterson and Carleton E. Curran, who are its originators, has appeared in another journal of the Society.[4] The system is based on existing usage and follows this as far as is practicable, so that a great many familiar names are unaffected. Only the general principles will be given here, but in the index itself will be found abundant cross references and also notes under Alcohols, Ketones, etc., indicating how compounds of these classes are named.[5]

1. The "chief function" of a compound is expressed in the main part of the name wherever possible, and not as a substituent, thus: Pyrrolecarboxylic acid, not carboxypyrrole; Ethyl alcohol or Ethanol, not hydroxyethane; Pentanone, not oxopentane.

2. In compounds of mixed function, the chief function is determined from the following order of precedence[6]: "onium" compound, acid (carboxylic, arsonic, sulfonic, stibonic, others), acid halide, amide, imide, amidine, aldehyde, nitrile, isocyanide, ketone, alcohol, phenol, thiol, amine, imine, ether, sulfide (and sulfoxide and sulfone). Thus, hydroxybenzonitrile, not cyanophenol; aminophenol, not hydroxyaniline.

3. A multiple chief function is expressed where feasible as -diol, -dicarboxylic acid, etc., rather than as hydroxy— ol, carboxy— acid, etc. But amino and imino groups attached to cyclic bases are treated as substituents; as, aminopyridine.

4. The index compound should be as large, and the substituents as small, as is practicable in conformity with the above rules; as, ethylbenzene, not phenylethane. But such names as diphenylethane and triphenylmethanol are exceptions. When the chief function is in a side chain attached to a complex nucleus, "additive" names are preferred in order to harmonize 1 and 4; thus, Naphthaleneacetic acid, not naphthylacetic acid (with the result that the compound is indexed with other naphthalene derivatives instead of under acetic acid: see 5).

5. The main part of the name with its functional ending, if any, is placed first in the index, the names of substituents following; thus, chloroacetic acid would appear in the index as Acetic acid, chloro- and dihydroxyanthraquinone as Anthraquinone, dihydroxy-. The part thus placed first is called the "index compound": it may or may not be the "parent compound" (in the second example the parent compound is anthracene).

6. Names in which two functions are expressed in the index compound, as propanolone, cyclopentanonecarboxylic acid, are avoided, except that a few very common ones, such as Phenolsulfonic acid, are used (indicated by cross references).

7. The names of the substituent radicals in the name of a compound are arranged in alphabetical order, as, benzylethylmethylphenylammonium chloride. The number of radicals of each kind does not affect the order (e.g., benzyl precedes ethyl no matter how many of each are present); but the compound name of a substituted radical is treated as a unit with its own alphabetic position; thus dimethylamino, $Me_2N$-, follows benzyl but precedes ethyl. When the complete name has been formed, it is alphabeted as any other word.

8. Parentheses, brackets and even braces are used where necessary to mark off complex radical names.

9. Arabic numerals are given preference for numbering, although Greek letters are used in accordance with common practice with "trivial" names of aliphatic acids, aldehydes, etc., and for some side chains. The numbering of each parent ring system is shown by ring formulas in the index under its name. This numbering conforms to the "Proposed International Rules for Numbering Organic Ring Systems"[7] with the following exceptions: acridine, anthracene, carbazole (and isocarbazole), cyclopenta[a]phenanthrene, phenanthrene, purine (and β-purine), xanthene (and isoxanthene)

10. When two or more numberings are equally indicated, that one is chosen which gives the smallest number or numbers for the chief function, then for double bonds if these must be regarded, then for triple bonds, then for point of attachment (doubled molecules), then for substituents.

11. Numbers and letters enclosed in brackets within the name of a parent ring system are used for distinguishing isomers.[8]

12. Numbers followed by H are used to indicate the position of hydrogen necessary to the existence of the compound; thus, 1,3,2*H*-Oxazine denotes an oxazine in which there is a $CH_2$ group instead of CH at position 2 (O at 1, N at 3); 4(3*H*)-Quinolone is equivalent to 3,4-dihydro-4-oxoquinoline. The older ring cuts have not been replaced.

13. Doubled molecules or radicals are indicated by names commencing with bi-(as, o,o'-Biphenol, Biphenyl, $\Delta^{4,4'}$-Bipiperidine). Bis-, tris-, tetrakis-, etc., are used before complex expressions; as, bis(dimethylamino).

In using the cross references, the general nature of them should be kept in mind; thus, the reference "Benzene, ethoxy-. See Phenetole." is applicable not only to this compound itself but to derivatives which are indexed under it rather than under Benzene.

NOTE. Since Volume 41 begins a new collective-index period, certain modifications of previous practice which had been waiting for adoption were then introduced. They have been made in order that the system may be rendered more consistent and may conform as nearly as is practicable with the latest published decisions[9] of the international and American committees on organic nomenclature. These changes are indicated in the index itself as far as possible by cross references, explanations under headings, etc. For changes in silicon nomenclature, introduced in the 1946 index, see the above paragraph entitled Silicon compounds.

The principal changes introduced in this index are (the sign §, to repeat, refers to sections in the above-mentioned Introduction to the 1945 Subject Index):

a. Use of certain trivial names (§60) is discontinued. α-Toluic acid is replaced by Acetic acid, phenyl-. "Di" names for most acids (as Dipicolinic acid) are avoided because names of their amides conflict with names of secondary amides.

[5] For the principles used in naming certain parent ring systems, and especially in distinguishing isomeric forms by the use of bracketed numbers and letters in the middle of a name, see Patterson, J. Am. Chem. Soc. 50, 3074-87(1928), Patterson and Capell, "The Ring Index," pp. 20-7.

[6] This order is an attempt to express not the relative chemical importance of functions but general usage in selecting one of them for the ending of the name. For a study of the literature on this question, see Patterson, Rec. trav. chim. 48, 1012-17(1929).

[9] Decisions made at the Amsterdam meeting of the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry held in September, 1949, had not been officially reported when this index went to the printer.

b. Inversion (§61) of names beginning with anhydro-, dehydro-, desoxy-, etc., is practiced so as to bring them together with the name of the parent compound; as, 7-dehydrostigmasterol is indexed at Stigmasterol, 7-dehydro-*. However, a few very common names like Dehydroascorbic acid remain uninverted. Names of xanthic acids like Ethylxanthic, become Xanthic acid, ethyl-, etc.

c. For changes in radical names (§73) see the list below.

d. "Bi" names in the aliphatic series (§79) are replaced by Geneva or "carboxylic" names; thus, Biacetyl becomes 2,3-Butanedione, Bimalonic acid becomes 1,1,2,2-Ethanetetracarboxylic acid; see 13, above.

e. The letter H follows numbers denoting "extra hydrogen" (§§105, 339–40); see 12, above.

f. The "oxa-aza" (or "a") nomenclature (§§123-5, 192, etc.) is used somewhat more freely, both for cyclic and acyclic compounds, where it provides less cumbersome names than by older methods.

g. Compounds of the structures RCONHOH and RCONR'OH are named as hydroxamic acids (§159) instead of as N-hydroxy amides.

h. The use of "aldehydic acid" names (§166) is extended. Thus, Valeric acid, δ-formyl- becomes Adipaldehydic acid.

i. The longer forms anisidide, phenetidide, toluidide and xylidide are used instead of aniside, phenetide, toluide and xylide (§210).

j. The compounds $RC(:NOH)NH_2$, formerly called hydroxamamides, are now named amidoximes (§216). As a substituting radical the group $-C(:NOH)NH_2$ is named hydroxyguanyl.

k. More additive names are used for cyclic amines (§235); as, Pyranamine instead of Pyranylamine.

l. Betaines (§§250–1) are named slightly differently; as, Glycine, dimethylphenylbetaine instead of Glycine, N-methyl-N-phenyl-, methyl ester, betaine. Entries or cross references are also made under Ammonium compounds, substituted.

m. Esters of organic derivatives of inorganic acids (§§282–3) are entered at the name of the acid; as, Amidophosphoric acid, N-cyclohexyl-, dibenzyl ester, not Benzyl N-cyclohexylamidophosphate.

n. In glycerides numbers instead of Greek letters are used to designate positions, as Stearin, 2-butyro-3-palmito-1- instead of Stearin, β-butyro-γ-palmito-α-(§287).

o. "Phenone" and "naphthone" names (§333) are formed from Geneva names of acids as well as from trivial names. The Geneva chain is marked with plain numbers and the cyclic portion with primes.

p. Hydroperoxide is used as a heading for non-acyl compounds of the type R—O—O—H (§378); as, Hydroperoxide, 2-chlorethyl instead of Hydrogen peroxide, 2-chloroethyl. Simple hydroperoxides have their own headings; as, Methyl hydroperoxide.

q. Peroxy acids (§379) are now entered as such, instead of as "per" acids; as, Peroxyacetic acid, not Peracetic acid.

Organic groups and radicals. In the Introduction to the 1945 Subject Index, as Appendix IV, pages 5963–67, was given a fairly complete list of the organic radical names used in the Index at that time. That list is still in effect, subject to the following changes and additions:

INDEX OF RING SYSTEMS

The following index of ring complexes is arranged as shown by the bold-face figures: 1-Ring System, with single figures indicating simple rings of 3, 5, etc., members; 2-Ring Systems, two figures denoting double rings of 3 and 5, 3 and 6, etc., members; then the triple and still more complex forms. Under each combination of figures the kind and number of atoms in the ring or rings are expressed in formulas. These formulas are arranged so that their initial rings are in the same order as in the Formula Index (see Key at the beginning of it). If the initial rings are alike, the second rings of the formula are considered, and so on. By this means the reader will be able to learn the name used in the index for the simplest parent compound containing any particular ring or combination of rings and by turning to this name in the index he will find the compound listed and, perhaps, cross references to names of derivatives. In the few instances in which rings are included for which definite names are not available, column references to abstracts are given. Rings which are united but which have no atoms in common (e.g., Biphenyl) are not regarded as ring complexes nor included in this index. "Spiro" compounds, which are characterized by two rings having one atom in common, are included.

(1) This designates a complex ring of three components, each of six members; (2) the first is heterocyclic, containing five carbon atoms and one nitrogen atom and the other two are carbocyclic rings of six atoms each; (3) parent compounds of this configuration will be found in the index under the seven names given. If derivatives are indexed a structural formula will be found with the proper numbering and also appropriate cross references to derivatives having other names, if any such are in the index.

It should be noted that the classification is made with reference to the smallest rings which, placed together, will constitute the plane formula. Thus Norcamphane is treated as a 5,5 complex although a third ring of six members (composed of atoms from the two five-membered rings) is also present.

BOTANICAL AND ZOÖLOGICAL NOMENCLATURE

For the commoner animals and plants the common names, as Opossum and Wheat, have been used in accordance with the basic indexing principle that it is best to make entries where most of the index users will look first. For most of the less common animals and plants the scientific names have been used wherever possible. Cross references have usually been entered in both cases, sometimes for several common names. Because of insufficient information, sometimes even in original papers, both types of name (with cross references both ways) have occasionally had to be used for what may be the same organism. Sometimes headings have been given the form "Chrysomphalus aonidum and(or) Florida red scale."

For insects our authority has been "Common Names of Insects Approved by the American Association of Economic Entomologists."[10]

For bacteria the classification given in Bergey's "Manual of Determinative Bacteriology," sixth edition, has been followed as far as possible, with numerous cross references.

with propene, $BF_3$ and its compds. as catalysts in, 1711*f*.
of 2-methylpropane, with butene, P 3189*a*.
with butene, $C_4H_8$ elimination in, P 2422*i* with butenes with HF catalyst, P 1175*h*, P 5583*f* with cyclopropane with 1,3-dibromopropane as catalyst, P 5583*i* with $C_2H_4$, P 1049*d*, P 5181*a* with $C_2H_4$ with HF-$BF_3$ catalysts, P 2422*h*.
2-methylbutane removal from amylenes for, P 9430*e* with 2-methylpropene polymer, P 8666*g*. of 2-methylpropane with butenes and isobutenes, and of paraffins, P 1955*r*.
of naphthalene or xylene with chlorinated paraffins in lubricant manuf., 4151
of naphthalenes with octenes, sulfating oils by, P 3194*c*.
of nitriles, 5686.
olefin (di-) hydrogenation to monoolefins in feed stocks for, 1554*h* of olefin mixt. ($C_3$-$C_5$) with isobutane 1956*e*.
of olefin polymers with paraffins to bricating oils, P 4008*d*.
of organomagnesium compds. by esters, 3819*b*.
of paraffins, 1247*h*, P 4004*h*, P 4458*d* 5174*f*, P 7677*e*.
with $AlCl_3$-branched-chain paraffin catalysts, P 8189*g*.
$AlCl_3$ complex catalyst for, P 7677*e* with $AlCl_3$-hydrocarbon complex salt with $AlCl_3$ as catalysts, P 390*a* $AlCl_3$ recovery in, P 4005*s*.
with Br catalyst mixt. with CBr $CCl_4$, $CHBr_3$ or $CHCl_3$, P 5181*h* control of viscosity of $AlCl_3$-hydrocarbon complex catalyst in, P 4005*c* with fluophosphoric acid-$BF_3$ reaction products as catalyst, P 5583*b* with HF catalyst on trays in fractionating column, P 5939*a*.
HF catalyst reaction with effluents and removal in, P 389*s*.
HF catalyst recovery and recycling in, P 1559*b*.
HF catalyst recovery in, P 9146, 3189*h*, P 5182*b*.
